Reference No.:1233

Date: 23.01.2016

It is proven, practiced and learned that disaster prevention and preparedness start from the community. Disaster risks are increasing day by day hence the environmental, social and economic losses are also amplified. Rapid and unplanned urbanization, concentration of migrated population at small towns on road sides in hills, unsafe construction practices, lack of proper drainage system, excessive and unscientific practices adopted in slope cutting for laying roads, pathetic condition of medical care in rural/ small towns/peri-urban areas, untrained human resource and above all non-seriousness and sluggish approach towards disaster management are critical and precarious risks which could be shaped into unprecedented disaster at any point of time.

The marginal and deprived section of the society is always be sufferer and badly affected in any disaster. They mostly do not have resources to recover social and economical losses caused by disaster. Awareness, small trainings courses, mock-drills, do's and don'ts and sensitization about of role of community in disastrous situation are some of the key significant elements must be known to the every section of community for becoming disaster resilient society.

Volunteerism and community based movements have remained intrinsic to the social fabric of our country and have helped sustain communities through times of crisis. The role of NGOs remains crucial in all phases of disaster management namely relief, response, rehabilitation, reconstruction, recovery, preparedness and mitigation. Recent trends with respect to management of natural disasters have highlighted the role of Non-Governmental Organizations (NGOs) as a vital stakeholder in the relief and response efforts especially with respect to facilitating communication and coordination between the administration and the affected community. NGOs have grass-root presence and strong linkages with the communities, and can readily respond to the needs of the affected community.
